Klasko Immigration Law Partners Lands on Best Places to Work List Third Year in A Row

PHILADELPHIA – Klasko Immigration Law Partners snagged a spot for 2018 Best Places to Work by the Philadelphia Business Journal.

The firm is delighted to have been named a Best Place to Work for the third consecutive year. Michele Madera, a partner at the firm, accepted the award at the ceremony on August 2nd, attended by executives and staff of other recognized companies at the Fillmore.

Given the emotionally-charged climate surrounding immigration, the firm is honored to have continued the tradition of consistently fostering a rewarding and positive work environment.

The firm’s managing partner, Ron Klasko said, “We’re very proud to be the only mid-sized law firm selected for this honor. We have worked hard to be a great place to work, and we’re really gratified that our employees appreciate our efforts.”

Craig Ey, Editor of the Philadelphia Business Journal states, “For 2018, we had a record number of applications for Best Places to Work and every company included here had to reach a statistical benchmark to be included. It’s not an easy benchmark to meet.” The contest is judged based on employee surveys and maintains its integrity using various levels of safeguards.

Frank Brydzinski, the firm’s executive director, believes the firm’s internal programs contribute to employees’ workplace satisfaction. He says, “We believe that investment in the success and wellbeing of our employees through regular training programs, a robust benefit program, and an assortment of social activities and community events has helped produce a team of highly motivated and skilled professionals ready to take on the issues and challenges facing our industry. It not only makes us a great place to work, it makes us a better law firm for our clients.”
