Klasko Immigration Law Partners Lands on Best Places to Work List for Fourth Year

PHILADELPHIA – For the fourth year in a row, Klasko Immigration Law Partners is pleased to have earned a spot on the 2019 Best Places to Work annual list published by the Philadelphia Business Journal.

Firm partner, Elise Fialkowski, and associate, Karuna Simbeck, accepted the award at the ceremony on July 30th, attended by executives and staff of other recognized companies at the 2300 Arena.

Given the ever-evolving climate surrounding immigration, the firm is pleased to have excelled during these challenging times while maintaining its tradition of a positive and productive work environment.

The firm’s human resources manager, Angela Devine-Ginion, said, “We value the growth and development of our employees at every level. Everyone has a voice and the ability to influence change at the firm. We support this by providing an inclusive environment and an open platform that encourages new ideas and discussions. Through mentorship programs and support services, I am proud that our firm continues to yield a culture of employee satisfaction – a true reflection of our passionate and talented staff.”

Frank Brydzinski, the firm’s executive director, believes the firm’s internal programs contribute to employees’ workplace satisfaction. He says, “We believe that investment in the success and wellbeing of our employees through regular training programs, a robust benefits program, and an assortment of social activities and community events has helped produce a team of highly motivated and skilled professionals ready to take on the issues and challenges facing our industry. It not only makes us a great place to work, but it also makes us a better law firm for our clients.”
